

but not what we pdf

We ask publishers to make sure they comply with the PDF/A standard whenever they upload a PDF, but this isn't always possible. 3: Saving as HTML could certainly be better supported, and isn't the easiest thing in the world.

Why GOV.UK content should be published in HTML and not PDF

We find ourselves, as individuals and as communities, willy-nilly cast in a world not of our own making, in which we want to survive, if possible to thrive, and whose features we want to understand. We start out with little prior information about that world, but we are endowed with the ability to come to know that there are things we expect on the basis of our hypothesis, and what we observe, but only in terms of one criterion, the probability that these differences could have occurred by "chance" (Henkel, 1976: 10).

When is statistical significance not significant?

What we know is what we know now and we respond to that; however, we do not know what we may become. We may guess or make assumptions about our futures or how we may respond to a situation, but we ...
