to cancer. The cellular stress responses must be taken into account when the cells are used in cell therapies and in regenerative medicine. The cellular stress response is a reaction to changes or fluctuations of extracellular conditions, which damage the structure and function of macromolecules (KÄ¼ltz, 2003).

3. Cellular Stress Responses. During tissue homeostasis there is an equilibrium between the net growth rate and the net rate of cell death . Upon exposure to cellular stress this physiological homeostasis is in danger. Depending on the type of cellular stress and its severity, the cellâ€™s response can be manifold.

Cellular Responses to Stressbrings together a group of scientists who work on different but interrelated aspects of cellular stress responses. The book provides state-of-the-art information on the wide spectrum of ways in which cells can respond to different forms of stress induced by chemicals, oxidants, and DNA-damaging agents.

in a range of cellular stress responses (4). Understanding cellular processes that are differentially regulated in cancerous versus normal cells is a prerequisite for exploiting them therapeutically. Three articles focus on this aspect. A hallmark of cancer as a proliferative disorder is the increased number of cell divisions and a high mitotic index.
